QUESTION PRESENTED

The Supreme Court of Illinois refused to grant leave to appeal a decision of the Court of Appeals for the State of Illinois for the Second District affirming the taking of Petitioner's property as part of a redevelopment plan in the City of Wheaton, Illinois.

The question presented for review is:

Whether the exercise of eminent domain authority by a municipality to take property under a redevelopment plan is valid in the absence of the municipality making the specific findings set forth in the statute granting eminent domain authority to the municipality?

OPINION BELOW

The condemnation action was filed on June 18, 2002, in the Circuit Court of Illinois for the Eighteenth Judicial Circuit (DuPage County). The trial court ultimately found for the City of Wheaton and against Mr. Sandberg and condemned his property. A final judgment was entered on October 2, 2006. (Appendices B and C).

Mr. Sandberg appealed to the Appellate Court of Illinois for the Second District. The Appellate Court affirmed the judgment below on December 13, 2007. (Appendix A).

Mr. Sandberg then sought leave from the Supreme Court of Illinois to appeal. His Petition for Leave to Appeal was denied on March 26, 2008. (Appendix D).

STATEMENT OF JURISDICTION

This Court's jurisdiction is invoked under 28 U.S.C. § 1257(a).

The Supreme Court of Illinois denied Petitioner's Petition for leave to Appeal on March 26, 2008. (Appendix D).

CONSTITUTIONAL AND STATUTORY PROVISIONS INVOLVED

Relevant Provisions of Tax Increment Allocation Redevelopment Act

65 ILCS 5/11-74.4-3 Definitions:

(b) "Conservation area" means any improved area within the boundaries of a redevelopment project area located within the territorial limits of the municipality in which 50% or more of the structures in the area have an age of 35 years or more. Such an area is not yet a blighted area but because of a combination of three or more of the following factors: dilapidation; obsolescence; deterioration: illegal use of individual structures: presence of structures below minimum code standards; abandonment; excessive vacancies overcrowding of structures and community facilities; lack of ventilation, light or sanitary facilities; inadequate utilities; excessive land coverage; deleterious land use or layout; depreciation of physical maintenance; lack of community planning, is detrimental to the public safety, health, morals or welfare and such area may become a blighted area.

(p) "Redevelopment project area" means an area designated by the municipality, which is not less in the aggregate than 11/2 acres and in respect to which the municipality has made a finding that there exist conditions which cause the area to be classified as an industrial park conservation area or a blighted area or a conservation area, or a combination of both blighted areas and conservation areas.

Relevant Provision Of
City Of Wheaton Ordinance No. F-0418
Approving A Tax Increment Redevelopment Plan

Section 1 B.

> There exist conditions which cause the Area to be subject to designation as a redevelopment project area under the Act and to be classified as a conservation area as defined in Section 11-74.4-3(b) of the Act.

STATEMENT OF THE CASE

Respondent City of Wheaton, an Illinois Home Rule Municipal Corporation, exercised eminent domain powers to take property belonging to Petitioner Robert O. Sandberg. On December 6, 1999, the City of Wheaton adopted by ordinance a Tax Increment Redevelopment Plan and Redevelopment Project for the City of Wheaton Main Street Redevelopment Project Area. The Ordinance was adopted pursuant to 65 ILCS 5/11-74.4-4 of the Illinois Compiled Statutes ("TIF Act"). The City asserted that the proposed Project was a "conservation area" as that term is defined in the TIF Act. The City also set forth the findings it claimed justified its actions. The City found that "There exist conditions which cause the Area to be subject to designation as a redevelopment project area under the Act and to be classified as a conservation area as defined in Section 11-74.4-3(b) of the Act."

Attached to the Ordinance and incorporated therein was the Wheaton Main Street Redevelopment Area

Project and Plan of November, 1999. The Plan concluded that the City could make a finding under the Act that "The Project Area on the whole has not been subject to appropriate growth and redevelopment through investment by private enterprise, and would not reasonably be anticipated to be developed consistent with City policies without adoption of this Redevelopment Plan." No finding that the area was detrimental to the public safety, health, morals or welfare was made by the City or in the Project and Plan.

On January 7, 2002, the City amended the Redevelopment Project and Plan. The Wheaton Main Street Redevelopment Area Project and Plan of November, 1999, as amended January 2, 2002, was attached to and incorporated in the Ordinance. The Amended Project and Plan concluded, as did the earlier version, that the City could make a finding under the Act that "The Project Area on the whole has not been subject to appropriate growth and redevelopment through investment by private enterprise, and would not reasonably be anticipated to be developed consistent with City policies without adoption of this Redevelopment Plan." As in the earlier version, no finding was made that the area was detrimental to the public safety, health, morals or welfare.

Defendant Robert Sandberg owned several parcels of property in the Main Street Redevelopment Area, including 109 North Main Street. On May 20, 2002, the City of Wheaton authorized the initiation of negotiation for the acquisition of 109 North Main Street. On May 21, 2002, the City of Wheaton sent an offer of purchase for $270,000.00 to Mr. Sandberg, which required a response in ten days. Mr. Sandberg responded by letter on May 30, 2002. On June 12, 2002, the City of Wheaton again wrote to Mr. Sandberg inviting him to accept, reject or make a counteroffer. He was also invited to make a presentation to the City Council at the June 17, 2002, meeting. On June 17, 2002, Mr. Sandberg spoke at the council meeting.

On that date, the City of Wheaton approved the filing of the condemnation action against Mr. Sandberg. The condemnation action was filed the next day on June 18, 2002 in the Circuit Court of Illinois for the Eighteenth Judicial Circuit (DuPage County).

During the lengthy trial proceedings, Mr. Sandberg continually challenged the use of eminent domain to take his property. Among other arguments, he asserted that the City had failed to make the necessary and appropriate specific findings required by the TIF Act which conferred the power to use eminent domain to take property for redevelopment and conservation areas. The trial court ultimately found for the City of Wheaton and against Mr. Sandberg and condemned his property. A final judgment in the amount of $300,000.00 was entered as the just compensation due Robert Sandberg on October 2, 2006. (Appendix A and Appendix B).

Mr. Sandberg appealed to the Appellate Court of Illinois for the Second District. The Appellate Court affirmed the judgment below on December 13, 2007. The Appellate Court rejected Petitioner's claim that the failure to make specific findings required by the TIF Act invalidated Wheaton's Ordinance. Instead, the Appellate Court held that Wheaton's reference to the TIF Act in its general finding that the redevelopment plan met the requirements of the TIF Act was sufficient. (Appendix A at 8a-12a).

Mr. Sandberg then sought leave from the Supreme Court of Illinois to appeal. His Petition for Leave to Appeal was denied on March 26, 2008. (Appendix D).

REASONS FOR GRANTING THE PETITION

Whether the exercise of eminent domain authority by a municipality taking private property in the absence of the specific findings required by the statute granting the municipality the authority is valid is an important question, implicating the appropriate balance of the power of government to take property and the rights of property owners to enjoyment of their property. The decision of the Illinois Courts allowing the taking of Plaintiff's property based solely upon the City of Wheaton's conclusory finding of a conservation area disregards the safeguards long recognized by this Court in cases such as City of Cincinnati v. Vester, 281 U.S. 439, 50 S. Ct. 360 (1930). Left undisturbed, the decision below will distort the carefully crafted balance between the rights of property owners and state and local governments.

REVIEW IS WARRANTED BECAUSE THE ERRONEOUS RULING OF THE ILLINOIS COURTS AFFIRMING THE USE OF EMINENT DOMAIN IN THE ABSENCE OF THE FINDINGS REQUIRED BY THE STATUTE UNDER WHICH THE USE OF EMINENT DOMAIN WAS AUTHORIZED IMPLICATES SIGNIFICANT ISSUES OF PROPERTY RIGHTS PROTECTED BY THE FOURTEENTH AMENDMENT.

Illinois Courts have recognized that statutes empowering governmental authorities to take private property through eminent domain are in derogation of individual rights and must be strictly construed to protect the rights of the property owners. Village of Cary v. Trout Valley Association, 282 Ill.App.3d 165, 667 N.E.2d 1082 (2nd Dist. 1996) and Department of Transportation v. Hunziker, 342 Ill.App.3d 588, 796 N.E.2d 122 (3rd Dist. 2003). "A statutory grant of eminent domain power can only be exercised in the manner authorized by statute." Village of Cary v. Trout Valley Association, supra at 169.

These holdings are in conformity with the direction of this Court in City of Cincinnati v. Vester, supra. There, this Court affirmed the rejection of condemnations that were based on the general finding of a municipality that the takings in question furthered an unspecified public use. In rejecting this reliance on a mere conclusion without the specification of a particular public use, this Court stated "it would seem clear that a mere statement by the council that the excess condemnation is in furtherance of such use would not be conclusive." Vester at 447. The Court went on to note that > [o]therwise, the taking of any land in excess condemnation, although in reality wholly unrelated to the immediate improvement, would be sustained on a bare recital. This would be to treat the constitutional provision as giving such a sweeping authority to municipalities as to make nugatory the express conditions upon which the authority is granted.

Vester at 447.

In this case, Wheaton's use of eminent domain is only valid if it was an authorized use of such power under the TIF Act. Illinois Courts have construed the purpose of that Act as providing municipalities with the means to eradicate blighted conditions. People ex rel. City of Canton v. Crouch, 79 Ill.2d 356, 403 N.E.2d 242 (1980). To be eligible to use eminent domain powers under the Act, a municipality must first establish that the proposed redevelopment area meets the statutory criteria for designation as a blighted area, conservation area or combination thereof. Board of Education v. Burr Ridge, 341 Ill.App.3d 1004, 793 N.E.2d 856 (1st Dist. 2003). Wheaton asserted that the redevelopment area, which included Mr. Sandberg's property, was a conservation area as that term is defined under the TIF Act. However, the City made only the conclusory finding that "[t]here exist conditions which cause the Area to be subject to designation as a redevelopment project area under the Act and to be classified as a conservation area as defined in Section 11-74.4-3(b) of the Act."

However, the Act requires the municipality to make findings that there exist specific conditions which cause the redevelopment area to be classified as a conservation area. 65 ILCS 5/11-74.4-3(p). Under the statute in existence at the time of the adoption of the ordinance, a conservation area was defined as:

> . . . any improved area . . . in which 50% or more of the structures in the area have an age of 35 years or more. Such an area is not yet a blighted area but because of a combination of three or more of the following factors: dilapidation; obsolescence; deterioration: illegal use of individual structures: presence of structures below minimum code standards; abandonment; excessive vacancies overcrowding of structures and community facilities; lack of ventilation, light or sanitary facilities; inadequate utilities; excessive land coverage; deleterious land use or layout; depreciation of physical maintenance; lack of community planning, is detrimental to the public safety, health, morals or welfare and such area may become a blighted area.

65 ILCS 5/11-74.4-3(b). Consequently, Wheaton had to make specific findings that 1) 50% of the buildings were more than 35 years old, 2) three or more of the listed factors existed making the area detrimental to the public safety, health, morals or welfare, and 3) because of the existence of these factors the area may become a blighted area.

In contradiction to City of Cincinnati v. Vester, supra, all of the findings required by the legislature of Illinois were not made by the City Wheaton. Indeed, given the limited findings of the Redevelopment Plan upon which the City based its eminent domain action, the required findings could not have been made. First, the City of Wheaton made no finding that any specific existing conditions made the area detrimental to the public safety, health, morals or welfare. The Project and Plan upon which the City relied also made no such finding of any condition that was already detrimental. To allow the City of Wheaton to adopt the ordinances absent a finding that the blighting factors had already made the area detrimental to the public safety, health, morals and welfare would ignore the clear language of the Act.

Second, the City of Wheaton had no basis on which to make its conclusory finding that the area may become blighted. The Eligibility Findings Report merely found that the characteristics contribute toward the decline of the project area. There is simply no finding that the existence of these characteristics would cause the area to become blighted.

The Illinois Appellate Court citing City of Batavia v. Sandberg, 286 Ill.App.3d 991 (2d Dist. 1997) excused the failure to make specific findings because the reference to a "conservation area as defined in Section 11-74.4-3(b) of the Act" incorporates the specific requirements of the definition included in the statute. This ruling should be rejected because it ignores the fact that the Project and Plan, which were included in the Ordinance, did not support the specific findings required by the statute. Just as in Vester, the municipality is improperly acting to take property on a "bare recital." As a result, an individual's property rights have been terminated by the act of a municipality that fails to meet the requirements of the statute authorizing the use of eminent domain and is not supported by its own findings.

When non-compliance with a statute is apparent from the Ordinance and its attachments, a conclusory finding referencing the statute is not sufficient to allow the taking of property. The constitutional rights of individuals to hold property should and can not be trampled by the exercise of authority without the assurances guaranteed by a rule of law requiring strict compliance with the empowering statute. City of Cincinnati v. Vester, supra. In this case, the Illinois Appellate Court's ruling permitted the taking of Petitioner's property without assurance that the City of Wheaton followed the law. In these circumstances, the City of Wheaton's taking of Petitioner's property was invalid and in violation of the Fourteenth Amendment.

CONCLUSION

For the foregoing reason, Petitioner respectfully requests that the Supreme Court grant review of this matter.

Respectfully submitted,

THE CITY OF WHEATON,

RULE 23 ORDER

The plaintiff, the City of Wheaton (the City), filed a condemnation petition against the defendants, Robert O. Sandberg, Karen K. Sandberg, Du Page Trust Company, and unknown owners. The Du Page Trust Company and unknown owners were defaulted, and Karen Sandberg was voluntarily dismissed from the action. Thus, only Robert Sandberg (the defendant) remained a party to the proceedings. The defendant filed a traverse and motion to dismiss the condemnation petition, which was denied. The City was thereafter granted the defendant's property. The defendant appeals, arguing that: (1) the City's ordinance authorizing the condemnation of his property is invalid because it did not comply with the Tax Increment Allocation Redevelopment Act (the Act) (65 ILCS 5/11 --74.4--3 et seq. (West Supp. 1999)); (2) the ordinance is invalid because the subject area did not contain the blighting factors necessary to qualify it as a conservation area under the Act; (3) the taking did not serve a public purpose; and (4) the City did not make a good-faith offer to purchase the property before initiating the condemnation action. We affirm.

BACKGROUND

"The Real Property Tax Increment Allocation Redevelopment Act [65 ILCS 5/11--74.4--3 et seq. (West Supp. 1999)] provides a mechanism for municipalities to finance redevelopment projects designed to eliminate or prevent urban blight." Kassnel v. Village of Rosemont, 135 Ill. App. 3d 361, 362-63 (1985); see also Village of Wheeling v. Exchange National Bank of Chicago, 213 Ill. App. 3d 325, 327 (1991). It permits a municipality to divert incremental tax revenues from other governmental entities located within a redevelopment project area and to use that money to subsidize improvements to the area. 65 ILCS 5/11 --74.4-8(a) (West Supp. 1999); Castel Properties, Ltd. v. City of Marion, 259 Ill. App. 3d 432, 433-34 (1994); Henry County Board v. Village of Orion, 278 Ill. App. 3d 1058, 1060 (1996).

The procedure under the Act provides for public hearings and, subsequently, the passage of an ordinance designating a redevelopment project area and approving a redevelopment plan or project (65 ILCS 5/11--74.4--5 (West Supp. 1999)). People ex rel. City of Canton v. Crouch, 79 Ill. 2d 356, 360 (1980). Once a redevelopment plan and project is adopted, a municipality can use a number of powers granted to it under the Act to improve the area and implement the plan, including acquiring private property by eminent domain. 65 ILCS 5/1--74.4--4(c) (West Supp. 1999); Canton, 79 Ill. 2d at 360-61; City of Chicago v. Boulevard Bank National Ass'n, 293 Ill. App. 3d 767, 773 (1997).

To designate a redevelopment project area, a municipality must first establish that the area meets the statutory criteria for designation as a "blighted area," a "conservation area," a combination thereof, or an "industrial park conservation area." 65 ILCS 5/11--74.4 --3(p) (West Supp. 1999). The redevelopment area here was designated a conservation area. A conservation area is defined as any improved area in which 50% or more of the structures in the area are over 35 years old. It is not yet a blighted area, but because of the presence of three or more specific factors, it is detrimental to the public safety, health, morals, or welfare and it may become a blighted area. 65 ILCS 5/11--74.4--3(b) (West Supp. 1999). These factors include: dilapidation; obsolescence; deterioration; presence of structures below minimum code standards; illegal use of individual structures; excessive vacancies; lack of ventilation, light, or sanitary facilities; inadequate utilities; excessive land coverage and overcrowding of structures and community facilities; deleterious land use or layout; or lack of community planning. 65 ILCS 5/11--74.4--3(b) (West Supp. 1999).

The City adopted such a redevelopment plan on December 6, 1999, declaring the Wheaton Main Street Redevelopment Project Area a conservation area as defined in section 11--74.4--3(b) of the Act (65 ILCS 5/11--74.4--3(b) (West Supp. 1999)). Wheaton Ordinance No. F--0418 § 1(B) (eff. December 6, 1999). The project area contained 133 parcels on 17 blocks in downtown Wheaton, consisting primarily of commercial property.

The redevelopment plan set out the City's goals for the redevelopment area and contained the opinions of Teska and Associates (Teska). Teska conducted a field survey over the course of three days in August and September of 1998, and inspected every parcel in the project area, to determine the area's eligibility for designation as a conservation area. Teska determined that 77% of the buildings in the project area were more than 35 years old. Teska also found that the project area satisfied the statutory criteria for a conservation area due to the predominance and extent of the following blighting factors: age, deterioration of the buildings, depreciation of physical maintenance, obsolescence, presence of structures below minimum code standards, excessive vacancies, and excessive coverage, meaning the overcrowding of buildings on a single parcel or on a parcel of inadequate size.[1] Fifty percent of the parcels in the project area exhibited at least one of above blighting factors. And each of these factors was found to contribute toward the decline of the project area as a whole.

The redevelopment plan had the stated purposes of "eradicating blighting conditions and instituting conservation measures," "removing and alleviating adverse conditions by encouraging private investment of underutilized and vacant properties which will strengthen the economy, tax base, business environment, and living environment," "improving existing public utilities within the area," and "enhancing the overall quality of the City of Wheaton."

1. Depreciation of physical maintenance was a factor to be considered under the Act in 1998, but for any redevelopment project area established by ordinance adopted on or after November 1, 1999, the definition of conservation area no longer included this factor. However, as the statute required that only three factors must be present for the area to be considered a conservation area, and as the City found the presence of five factors other than depreciation of physical maintenance, this statutory change is of no concern in this appeal.

Appendix A

The defendant was the owner of several commercial buildings in the project area, including 109 N. Main Street, which is the property at issue in this appeal.

On May 20, 2002, the City passed an ordinance authorizing the acquisition of the real property necessary to implement the plan. The City sent the defendant a certified letter on May 21, 2002, informing him that the city council had authorized the acquisition of his property at 109 N. Main Street and offering to purchase his property for $270,000. The defendant did not respond to the offer. On June 12, 2002, the City sent another letter to the defendant, requesting that the defendant accept, reject, or counter the City's offer. At a city council meeting on June 17, 2002, the defendant addressed the city council and stated that the City's offer was unacceptable.

On June 18, 2002, the City filed a condemnation action seeking to acquire the defendant's property. The defendant filed a traverse and motion to dismiss the City's condemnation petition, alleging essentially as follows: the area was not blighted, no good-faith offer was made by the City to purchase the property, the City failed to demonstrate necessity or public use for the property, and the City's taking of the property would not benefit the health, safety, or welfare of the general public.

Apparently a hearing was held on the defendant's traverse and motion to dismiss. However, the defendant has failed to provide this court with a complete report of proceedings. The following can be adduced from the common-law record and the few transcripts that the defendant has provided. The defendant challenged the validity of the ordinance, and this motion was apparently denied. The defendant also challenged the condemnation action for lack of statutory authority, necessity, a public purpose, and an adequate legal description. These were deemed traverse issues and were resolved in the City's favor, although the court's order does not specify why or how.

The parties then proceeded to a bench trial on the issue of good-faith negotiations, and the court found that the City satisfied the requirement of good-faith negotiations. In so ruling, the court found that the City had retained competent expert witnesses who determined the fair market value of the defendant's property. This offer was conveyed to the defendant, and the defendant rejected the offer.

Lastly, the parties proceeded on the issue of just compensation. The City retained two appraisal experts. One expert valued the defendant's property at $265,000 and the other expert valued it at $270,000. The defendant's expert valued the property at $300,000. Because the experts' opinions did not vary greatly, and "[i]n the spirit of judicial economy and to end [the] litigation," the City conceded the value as set forth by the defendant's expert and moved for summary judgment on that issue. The court granted summary judgment on the issue of valuation, finding $300,000 to be just compensation for the defendant's property. In turn, the court granted the City the property.

The defendant appeals the denial of his traverse and motion to dismiss. "A traverse and motion to dismiss challenge the plaintiff's right to condemn the defendant's property and will result in dismissal when the plaintiff cannot show its right to condemn by proper proof." Village of Cary v. Trout Valley Ass'n, 282 Ill. App. 3d 165, 169 (1996). Where a defendant files a traverse and motion to dismiss, the burden is on the plaintiff to make a prima facie case of the disputed allegations. Trout Valley Ass'n, 282 Ill. App. 3d at 169. When a valid ordinance for a taking of property is introduced into evidence, it establishes a prima facie case authorizing the acquisition of the property by eminent domain. Exchange National Bank, 213 Ill. App. 3d at 331. The burden then shifts to the defendant to show that the plaintiff abused its discretion or lacked the authority to condemn the site. Exchange National Bank, 213 Ill. App. 3d at 331. Here, the City ordinance was introduced, establishing a prima facie case authorizing the taking. The burden then shifted to the defendant to prove his allegations, namely that the ordinance was invalid, the taking served no public purpose, and the City failed to engage in good-faith negotiations prior to instituting suit. For the reasons that follow, we find that the defendant failed to sustain his burden of proof.

First, the defendant argues that the trial court erred in denying his traverse and motion to dismiss because the City's ordinance is invalid for failing to strictly comply with the Act authorizing the creation of a redevelopment area (65 ILCS 5/11--74.4--3 et seq. (West Supp. 1999)). The record on appeal does not reveal the substance of the parties' arguments at trial or the court's ruling on this issue, but the City states that the trial court treated this as a facial challenge to the validity of the ordinance.

In essence, we are being asked to interpret the requirements of the Act. This involves statutory interpretation, which is a question of law. City of Oakbrook Terrace v. Suburban Bank & Trust Co., 364 Ill. App. 3d 506, 510 (2006). Our review of such issues is de novo. Suburban Bank & Trust Co., 364 Ill. App. 3d at 510; Nikolic v. Seidenberg, 242 Ill. App. 3d 96, 99 (1993). The judgment may be affirmed on any grounds supported by the record, regardless of whether the trial court relied on those grounds or whether its reasoning was correct. See Nikolic, 242 Ill. App. 3d at 99. Therefore, although we do not know the court's reasoning in ruling against the defendant on this issue, we may nonetheless review this question of law.

"A municipality can only exercise the power of eminent domain when it has been specifically conferred by legislative enactment." Trout Valley, 282 Ill. App. 3d at 169. And then, the power can be exercised only in the manner authorized by the enactment. Trout Valley, 282 Ill. App. 3d at 169. A statute or ordinance conferring the eminent domain power must be strictly construed in order to protect the rights of property owners. Trout Valley, 282 Ill. App. 3d at 169.

Appendix A

In enacting the ordinance that ultimately led to this condemnation action, the City relied, in part, on section 11--74.4--3(p) of the Act (65 ILCS 5/11--74.4--3(p) (West Supp. 1999)), which prescribes the procedures for establishing such an area.

Specifically, section 11--74.4--3(p) defines a redevelopment project area as:

> "an area designated by the municipality  in respect to which the municipality has made a finding that there exist conditions which cause the area to be classified as an industrial park conservation area or a blighted area or a conservation area, or a combination of both blighted areas and conservation areas." 65 ILCS 5/11--74.4--3(p) (West Supp. 1999). A conservation area, in turn, is defined as:
> "any improved area within the boundaries of a redevelopment project area located within the territorial limits of the municipality in which 50% or more of the structures in the area have an age of 35 years or more. Such an area is not yet a blighted area but because of a combination of 3 or more of the following factors is detrimental to the public safety, health, morals or welfare and such an area may become a blighted area * * *." 65 ILCS 5/11--74.4--3(b) (West Supp. 1999).

Here, in ordinance No. F--0418, the City made the following finding:

> "There exist conditions which cause the Area to be subject to designation as a redevelopment project area under the Act and to be classified as a conservation area as defined in Section 11--74.4--3(b) of the Act." Wheaton Ordinance No. F--0418 §1(B) (eff. December 6, 1999).

The defendant argues that the ordinance and the redevelopment plan failed to establish the remaining requirements of a conservation area, specifically that the area "is detrimental to the public safety, health, morals or welfare" and that the factors would "cause the area to become blighted." See 65 ILCS 5/11--74.4--3(b) (West 1994). This precise issue was addressed and rejected by this court in City of Batavia v. Sandberg, 286 Ill. App. 3d 991 (1997). We found that when the city used the words "a 'Conservation Area' as defined in Section 11--74.4--3(b) of the Act" in its ordinance, it adopted and included the entire definition being referred to, i.e., the definition of a conservation area. Sandberg, 286 Ill. App. 3d at 997-98. The Act does not require that the entire definition of conservation area be included verbatim in the city's findings. Sandberg, 286 Ill. App. 3d at 998. Whether the city uses the phrase "a 'Conservation Area' as defined in Section 11--74.4--3(b) of the Act" or includes verbatim the entire definition of a conservation area, the substance of the findings would be the same either way. Sandberg, 286

Ill. App. 3d at 998. Thus, here, the City complied with the provisions of the Act in establishing a redevelopment project area, and it was not error for the trial court to deny the defendant's traverse and motion to dismiss on this ground.

Next, the defendant attacks the validity of the ordinance's underlying findings, i.e., that the proposed redevelopment area qualified as a conservation area. The defendant acknowledges that municipal ordinances are presumed valid, but argues that he presented sufficient evidence to overcome the presumption.

Indeed, municipal ordinances are presumed valid, and the party challenging the ordinance bears the burden of proving its invalidity. City of Chicago v. Pooh Bah Enterprises, Inc., 224 Ill. 2d 390, 406 (2006); Greater Peoria Sanitary & Sewage Disposal District v. Hermann, 153 Ill. App. 3d 398, 401 (1987). Challenging a municipality's ordinance requires the defendant to overcome the ordinance's presumptive validity by clear and convincing evidence. Boulevard Bank National Ass'n, 293 Ill. App. 3d at 780; Henry County Board, 278 Ill. App. 3d at 1062; Castel Properties, 259 Ill. App. 3d at 439-40. "Clear and convincing evidence is that 'quantum of proof that leaves no reasonable doubt in the mind of the fact finder as to the truth of the proposition [stated].' " Henry County Board, 278 Ill. App. 3d at 1062, quoting Bazydlo v. Volant, 164 Ill. 2d 207, 213 (1995).

Furthermore, when a trial court makes a finding of fact, a reviewing court defers to the trial court and so decides only whether the finding is against the manifest weight of the evidence. Henry County Board, 278 Ill. App. 3d at 1062; see also Southwestern Illinois Development Authority v. Al-Muhajirum, 318 Ill. App. 3d 1005, 1007 (2001) (a trial court's finding that property was blighted will not be disturbed unless it was contrary to the manifest weight of the evidence). A decision is against the manifest weight of the evidence only if the opposite conclusion is clearly evident or the determination is unreasonable, arbitrary, or without basis in the evidence presented. Best v. Best, 358 Ill. App. 3d 1046, 1053 (2005). If the record contains any evidence to support the trial court's judgment, the judgment should be affirmed. Department of Transportation ex rel. People v. 151 Interstate Road Corp., 209 Ill. 2d 471, 488 (2004).

The record shows that the City introduced into evidence the ordinance and the redevelopment plan. The redevelopment plan contained specific and detailed findings establishing the declining character of the proposed redevelopment area. Based upon these findings, a presumption existed that the ordinance finding that the area qualified as a conservation area was valid. See Board of Education, Pleasantdale School District No. 107 v. Village of Burr Ridge, 341 Ill. App. 3d 1004, 1012 (2003).

Appendix A

Citing Reed-Custer Community Unit School District No. 255-U v. City of Wilmington, 253 Ill. App. 3d 503 (1993), the defendant argues that once he introduced evidence that development in the area could be reasonably anticipated, he successfully rebutted the presumption, and the presumption vanished. It appears that the defendant has confused the effect of a presumption with the standard of proof. See Board of Education of Community High School District No. 218 v. Village of Robbins, 327 Ill. App. 3d 599, 606 (2001). It is true that " '[o]nce a party introduces sufficient evidence to rebut a presumption, the "bubble bursts" and the presumption disappears.' " Robbins, 327 Ill. App. 3d at 606, quoting Reed-Custer, 253 Ill. App. 3d at 508. Nonetheless, to overturn an ordinance, the defendant must prove by clear and convincing evidence the invalidity of the ordinance. See Robbins, 327 Ill. App. 3d at 606. Regardless of whether the defendant was able to introduce evidence to rebut the presumption, the trial court could properly determine that the defendant had not met his burden of proof in showing, through clear and convincing evidence, that the ordinance was invalid. See Robbins, 327 Ill. App. 3d at 606; see also Reed-Custer, 253 Ill. App. 3d at 508 (appellate court concluded that plaintiffs overcame the presumed validity of the City's factual findings by clear and convincing evidence and the judge's decision was not against the manifest weight of the evidence).

The defendant argues that the trial court's finding of validity was against the manifest weight of the evidence, but the defendant's failure to provide this court with a complete record precludes meaningful review of this issue. As the appellant, the defendant has an obligation to provide the reviewing court with a sufficiently complete record of the proceedings so that the court may resolve all pending issues. Foutch v. O'Bryant, 99 Ill. 2d 389, 391-92 (1984). Here, the record on appeal does not contain a complete account of the hearing on the defendant's traverse and motion to dismiss. In the absence of a complete record, we must presume that the trial court's judgment was in conformity with the law and supported by the facts presented to the trial court. Foutch, 99 Ill. 2d at 392; see In re W.L.W., 299 Ill. App. 3d 881, 884 (1998) (where the record on appeal is incomplete, the reviewing court will indulge in every reasonable presumption favorable to the judgment or order being appealed).

Even if we were to assume that the defendant relied only on the documentary evidence in the common-law record to sustain his burden of proof, this evidence was insufficient to overcome the presumptive validity of the ordinance. First, the defendant relies on evidence that he received an "offer [to purchase] his property from a private source." The defendant's suggestion that his particular property was of value, and thus not blighted, is no defense to the condemnation action. City of Chicago v. Barnes, 30 Ill. 2d 255, 257 (1964) (the fact that there may be some sound buildings in the blighted area is no defense to the proceedings); Exchange National Bank, 213 Ill. App. 3d at 332. Property may be taken even though, standing by itself, it is unoffending, for the test is based on the condition of the area as a whole. Barnes, 30 Ill. 2d at 257; Exchange National Bank, 213 Ill. App. 3d at 332.

Also, the defendant relies on the comment of Councilman Gresk, made during a city council meeting, that 10 or 12 new businesses had opened in Wheaton in 2001. In proper context, Councilman Gresk was not testifying to the particular conditions in the redevelopment project area, but rather he was simply disputing the defendant's allegations that the City does not encourage or assist new businesses. Lastly, the defendant relies on the affidavits of his expert witnesses who challenged the findings of the City's experts. The affidavits merely make brief, conclusory statements that the City's expert findings were not supported by any evidence. The weight to be assigned an expert opinion depends on the factual basis for that opinion. See In re Winters, 255 Ill. App. 3d 605, 609 (1994) (an expert opinion is only as valid as the reasons for it). Here, the defendant's expert opinions were not supported by facts. In any event, they presented an issue of credibility that was within the trial court's province to resolve. People v. Ferguson, 181 Ill. App. 3d 950, 953 (1989) ("Where the evidence is conflicting, it is the province of the trier of fact to resolve the conflict and determine which witnesses are to be believed"). As the trier of fact, the judge could accept one expert opinion over another, and we find no basis to overturn the court's findings. City of Marseilles v. Radke, 307 Ill. App. 3d 972, 977 (1999); see, e.g., Alsip Park District v. D & M Partnership, 252 Ill. App. 3d 277, 286 (1993). For these reasons, we conclude that the court's finding, that the defendant failed to establish by clear and convincing evidence the invalidity of the ordinance, was not against the manifest weight of the evidence.

Next, the defendant argues that the taking did not serve a public purpose. The defendant contends that the real reason for the taking was "to push [the defendant] out of the City of Wheaton."

Before the right of eminent domain may be exercised, the law requires that the use for which land is taken shall be public, not private. Southwestern Illinois Development Authority v. National City Environmental, L.L.C., 199 Ill. 2d 225, 236 (2002); Poole v. City of Kankakee, 406 Ill. 521, 526 (1950). Under the constitution, property cannot be condemned for a private purpose. U.S. Const. amend. V; Ill. Const. 1970, art. I, §15.

It is well established that the purpose of eliminating a blighted area is a valid public purpose. National City Environmental, 199 Ill. 2d at 238; City of Urbana v. Paley, 68 Ill. 2d 62, 73 (1977); City of Chicago v. Walker, 50 Ill. 2d 69, 71 (1971); Al-Muhajirum, 318 Ill. App. 3d at 1009-1010; City of Chicago v. Gorham, 80 Ill. App. 3d 496, 499 (1980). "This is no less true when the purpose of the municipality is the prevention, rather than elimination, of blight which has not yet begun or which, though begun, has not yet reached its apex." Paley, 68 Ill. 2d at 73. Stimulation of commercial growth and removal of economic stagnation are objectives that serve an important public purpose. Paley, 68 Ill. 2d at 75; see National City Environmental, 199 Ill. 2d at 239.

The record establishes the stated purposes of the taking as: "eradicating blighting conditions and instituting conservation measures," "removing and alleviating adverse conditions by encouraging private investment of underutilized and vacant properties which will strengthen the economy, tax base, business environment, and living environment," "improving existing public utilities within the area," and "enhancing the overall quality of the City of Wheaton." The City's promotion of the commercial rebirth of its downtown area is a public purpose satisfying the requirements of the constitution. See Paley, 68 Ill. 2d at 74. The burden then shifted to the defendant to show that the condemnation served no public purpose. See Alsip, 252 Ill. App. 3d at 285.

Again, the judgment must be affirmed because the record is incomplete. See Foutch, 99 Ill. 2d at 391-92. We cannot find that the defendant sustained his burden of proof without a complete record of the evidence presented to the trial court and the court's evaluation of that evidence.

In any event, the record as it stands does not support the defendant's argument. The defendant apparently presented little evidence, other than unfounded opinion testimony that the City's taking failed to satisfy a public purpose. Moreover, contrary to the defendant's argument, evidence that the City was pursuing a rule to show cause against the defendant for the defendant's continued failure to comply with the City's building code does not show a private purpose for the City's taking.

Lastly, the defendant argues that the trial court erred in finding that the City made a reasonable attempt to agree with the defendant on compensation for his property prior to filing suit.

The Illinois Eminent Domain Act provides that private property will not be taken for public use without the payment of just compensation. 735 ILCS 5/7--101 (West Supp. 1999); Lake County Forest Preserve District v. First National Bank of Waukegan, 200 Ill. App. 3d 354, 356 (1990). A condition precedent to the exercise of eminent domain power is an attempt to reach an agreement with the property owner on the amount of compensation. Lake County Forest Preserve, 200 Ill. App. 3d at 356. "In this regard, the acquiring authority must make a bona fide attempt to agree, and the attempt must be made in good faith." Lake County Forest Preserve, 200 Ill. App. 3d at 356. Where a wide disparity exists between the offer of the acquiring authority and the demand of the property owner, and where the circumstances show that no practical solution can be reached, no further negotiations are necessary. Lake County Forest Preserve, 200 Ill. App. 3d at 356.

Generally, whether a party to a condemnation action has acted in good faith is a question of fact. 151 Interstate Road, 209 Ill. 2d at 488. Consequently, a finding of good faith will not be reversed on review unless it was against the manifest weight of the evidence. 151 Interstate Road, 209 Ill. 2d at 488. Again, if the record contains any evidence to support the trial court's judgment, the judgment should be affirmed. 151 Interstate Road, 209 Ill. 2d at 488.

Again, we find that without a transcript of the hearing itself, we have no basis to overturn the court's findings. In any event, even considering solely the evidence in the common-law record, we cannot conclude that the trial court's judgment was against the manifest weight of the evidence.

The record supports that the City made a good-faith effort to agree on just compensation with the defendant before filing suit. The City obtained the opinion of an appraisal expert who valued the property at $270,000. The City offered to purchase the defendant's property for $270,000. As the City offered the defendant the fair market value of the property, the City conducted good-faith negotiations. City of Naperville v. Old Second Nat'l Bank of Aurora, 327 Ill. App. 3d 734, 741 (2002) (a condemning authority has satisfied its statutory obligation to make a bona fide attempt to agree where the authority offered to purchase the property for its appraised value). Thus, the trial court did not err in denying the traverse and motion to dismiss the condemnation complaint.

CONCLUSION

For these reasons, the judgment of the circuit court of Du Page County is affirmed. Affirmed.
